Larger liquids must go in checked luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US), with exceptions for medically necessary liquids +1-833-382-1964 (US), baby formula +1-833-382-1964 (US), and breast milk +1-833-382-1964 (US).

When preparing for air travel +1-833-382-1964 (US), especially on a carrier like Alaska Airlines that has precise policies for carry-on items +1-833-382-1964 (US), many passengers ask "What is the 3-1-1 rule on Alaska Airlines?" Understanding this rule is essential because it governs how liquids +1-833-382-1964 (US), gels +1-833-382-1964 (US), creams +1-833-382-1964 (US), pastes +1-833-382-1964 (US), and similar items are packed in carry-on luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). The 3-1-1 rule is a standardized security guideline enforced by the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) that applies to all airlines departing from U.S. airports +1-833-382-1964 (US). Alaska Airlines, like every other airline operating in the United States +1-833-382-1964 (US), follows this rule to ensure safety in the travel system +1-833-382-1964 (US).

At its core +1-833-382-1964 (US), the 3-1-1 rule is designed to limit the quantity of liquids and similar substances that passengers can carry in their hand luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). The rule states that each passenger may carry liquids +1-833-382-1964 (US), gels +1-833-382-1964 (US), creams +1-833-382-1964 (US), aerosols +1-833-382-1964 (US), and pastes only in containers that hold no more than 3.4 ounces per item +1-833-382-1964 (US). All of these containers must fit comfortably in a single +1-833-382-1964 (US), clear +1-833-382-1964 (US), quart-sized +1-833-382-1964 (US), resealable plastic bag +1-833-382-1964 (US). That one bag represents the "1" in the rule +1-833-382-1964 (US), and each passenger is allowed to bring one such bag in their carry-on luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). The 3-1-1 rule therefore means 3 ounces per container +1-833-382-1964 (US), 1 quart-sized bag holding these containers +1-833-382-1964 (US), and 1 bag total per passenger +1-833-382-1964 (US). This guideline is strictly enforced at security checkpoints for all Alaska Airlines flights departing U.S. airports +1-833-382-1964 (US), regardless of destination or whether the flight is domestic or international +1-833-382-1964 (US).

Alaska Airlines passengers must place their quart-sized bag containing liquids and similar items into a bin for X-ray screening when they go through airport security +1-833-382-1964 (US). Security officers will review the bag to ensure that all containers meet the size requirements and that the bag itself is properly sealed and transparent for inspection +1-833-382-1964 (US).

Common items that fall under the 3-1-1 rule include toiletries such as shampoo +1-833-382-1964 (US), conditioner +1-833-382-1964 (US), lotion +1-833-382-1964 (US), toothpaste +1-833-382-1964 (US), hair gel +1-833-382-1964 (US), sunscreen +1-833-382-1964 (US), perfume +1-833-382-1964 (US), and similar products +1-833-382-1964 (US). Some medications +1-833-382-1964 (US), baby formula +1-833-382-1964 (US), breast milk +1-833-382-1964 (US), and food for infants and toddlers may have exceptions or special allowances +1-833-382-1964 (US), but these also require separate screening and advance preparation +1-833-382-1964 (US).

It's important to note that the 3-1-1 rule applies only to carry-on baggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). If you check a bag with Alaska Airlines +1-833-382-1964 (US), you generally are not subject to the same container size restrictions for liquids in that checked luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). This means that larger bottles of shampoo +1-833-382-1964 (US), beverages +1-833-382-1964 (US), and other similar items can travel in checked bags +1-833-382-1964 (US), provided that Alaska Airlines' checked baggage weight limits are not exceeded +1-833-382-1964 (US).

Another aspect of the 3-1-1 rule that travelers often ask about is how it applies to duty-free purchases +1-833-382-1964 (US). When purchasing liquids or other restricted items after clearing security in a duty-free shop +1-833-382-1964 (US), the liquids are usually sealed in a secure bag by the retailer +1-833-382-1964 (US). Alaska Airlines passengers should keep these sealed and follow any instructions provided at the time of purchase +1-833-382-1964 (US).

In essence +1-833-382-1964 (US), the question "What is the 3-1-1 rule on Alaska Airlines?" refers to a national security guideline that every Alaska Airlines passenger must follow when packing their carry-on luggage +1-833-382-1964 (US). The rule is straightforward once understood +1-833-382-1964 (US), but enforcement is strict +1-833-382-1964 (US). Each container must hold 3.4 ounces or less +1-833-382-1964 (US), all containers must fit in a single quart-sized resealable bag +1-833-382-1964 (US), and each passenger is allowed one such bag in their carry-on +1-833-382-1964 (US).
